Electron Transfer Reactions Of Complex

Electron Transfer Reactions of Complex Ions in Solution covers the significant development of some important area of electron transfer reactions of complex ions. This four-chapter book emerged from a series of lectures at the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn in November and December 1967.

The electron transfer in a microheterogeneous system is a perfect mimic of biological electron transfer. The electron transfer between biologically important phenolic acids and ruthenium (II) complexes is systematically studied in the presence of anionic and cationic micelles.

This summary will highlight the research on: (1) halide transfer reactions, (2) alkyl and acyl transfer reactions and (3) reactions of seventeen-electron organometallic complexes. At this point some conclusions on the transfer of hydrogen, halogen and methyl as the cation, radical and anion can be made.

The rates of electron transfer reactions between metal ion complexes in solution have been widely studied recently (1-20). Taube (1) has pointed out that mechanisms of oxidation-reduction reactions of transition metal ion complexes can be separated into two classes; inner-sphere and outer-sphere,

Electron transfer (ET) occurs when an electron relocates from an atom or molecule to another such chemical entity. ET is a mechanistic description of a redox reaction, wherein the oxidation state of reactant and product changes. Electron transfer is ionic bonding. Numerous biological processes involve ET reactions.

Charge-transfer complex. Solvatochromism: In solution, the transition energy and therefore the complex color varies with variation in solvent permittivity, indicating variations in shifts of electron density as a result of the transition. This distinguishes it from the  $\pi^* \leftarrow \pi$  transitions on the ligand.
