If Women Counted

If Women Counted (1988) is a book by New Zealand academic and former politician Marilyn Waring, that is regarded as the "founding document" of the discipline of feminist economics. The book is a groundbreaking and systematic critique of the system of national accounts, the international standard of measuring economic growth, and the ways in which women's unpaid work as well as the value of ...

If Women Counted: A New Feminist Economics: Marilyn Waring ...

Waring, the author of If Women Counted, deserves credit for focusing attention on this matter with key implications for public policy (as seen in Weisbrod, 1988). However a balanced analysis would show that there are no special implications for economic feminism. Marilyn Waring also deserves credit for her critical evaluation of the hidden
